

AMERICAN- WHISKEY & BOURBON

WHISKEY: a type of distilled alcoholic beverage made from fermented grain mash. Different grains are used for different varieties, including barley, malted barley, rye, malted rye, wheat, and corn. Whiskey is aged in wooden casks, made generally of white oak, except that in the United States corn whiskey need not be aged.

Whiskey is being made in several different countries, but the four largest producers of whiskey are America, Canada, Ireland & Scotland. Every country has its regulations or lack thereof, some of American whiskey regulations are the following: rye malt, malt & wheat whiskey have to consist of at least 51% of that grain. Bourbon whiskey is made from mash that consists of at least 51% corn. Corn whiskey is made from mash that consists of at least 80% corn. These types of whiskey must be distilled to not more than 80% alcohol by volume, and the addition of colouring, caramel and flavourings is not allowed. These types of whiskey must then be aged in charred new oak containers, except for corn whiskey. Corn whiskey does not have to be aged but, if it is aged, it must be in un-charred oak barrels or un-charred used barrels. The ageing for corn whiskey usually is brief, e.g., six months.

By Canadian law, Canadian whiskies must be produced and aged in Canada, be distilled from a fermented mash of cereal grain, be aged in wood barrels for not less than three years, and "possess the aroma, taste and character generally attributed to Canadian whisky". The terms "Canadian Whisky" and "Canadian Rye Whisky" are legally indistinguishable in Canada and do not require any use of rye or other specific grain in their production. In fact, the predominant grain used in making "Canadian Rye Whiskey" is corn. Canadian whiskies may contain caramel and flavoring in addition to the distilled mash spirits, and there is no maximum limit on the alcohol level of the distillation, so the bulk of the distilled content (often more than 90 percent) may be neutral spirits rather than straight whiskies.

There are several types of whiskey common to Ireland: single malt, single grain, blended whiskey and pure pot still whiskey. Most Irish whiskeys are normally distilled three times and unpeated malt is almost always used. By law, Irish whiskey must be produced in Ireland and aged in wooden casks for a period of no less than three years, although in practice it is usually three or four times that period.

Scotch whiskies are generally distilled twice, although, some are distilled a third time and others even up to twenty times. Scotch Whisky Regulations require anything bearing the label "Scotch" to be distilled in Scotland and matured for a minimum of three years in oak casks, among other, more specific criteria. The basic types of Scotch are malt and grain, which are combined to create blends. Many Scotch whiskies use peat smoke to treat their malt, giving Scotch its distinctive smoky flavor. Scotch malt whiskies are divided into five main regions: Highland, Lowland, Islay, Speyside and Campbeltown.
